Forced Perspective

May 13th, 2020

Daily Objective

This will be a three day project. Today you are to brainstorm and think of different subjects to manipulate the scaling/perspective of.

Bell Ringer

In what situations can you use forced perspective to add visual interest to your image?

Lesson/Activity

Manipulation perspective in your photography can create an interesting dialogue between the subject and objects surrounding it. Can you make something really small look big? Can you make something really big look small? Find objects or places where you can use yourself or someone else to alter the perspective/scaling of objects.

Spend today brainstorming different subjects that would be good for forced perspective

- 1) What small objects around your home can you try to make bigger than they actually are?
- 2) What small objects outside your home can you try to make bigger than they actually are?
- 3) What are some structures that you can try to make smaller than they actually are?
