Small, loose sketches of objects we find or design concepts

We began this week talking about American Realism.

This art movement showed the more normal, everyday side to life than artists had shown before.

Often we saw working people, people eating or just caught off guard, people in the streets doing everyday tasks...

It looked as though painters were capturing daily scenes with a camera.

These next two days you are going to create your own American Realism composition. Today, let's just begin with our usual Thumbnail Thursday sketches to get started on your ideas.

What is going on around you that you find interesting that could tell a story or be telling of our times today? Maybe it tells a story of a hard working parent, a sibling looking up to an older sibling, a postal worker, a cashier working hard through our pandemic...

Find a candid moment to sketch. Fortunately, these are just quick thumbnails, so use our gesture drawing techniques to capture the moments as you see them today. Maybe Keep your pencil and paper out with you all day as you never know what may strike you as a moment worth remembering. Try to find at least 5 moments today worth capturing in a quick sketch.

creations...

We'd love to see your work!!!
